it seems outrageous to me that the government has spent so much time and money prosecuting microsoft when there are other problems that are so much more deserving of the money and effort.

you spent years chasing ibm amd accomplished nothing but making lawyers rich.

you broke apart at&t so that we all pay more money for less phone service and cannot identify which vendor is at fault when things 'do not work'.

while microsoft is not perfect, they do produce a consistent predictable product that fully integrated those options in the pc operating system that i care to use.

i do not look forward to the government getting me something better that i will end up paying more for and spending hours installing it.

it ain't broke - why do you have to fix it.

let sun and oracle fight their own battles.

the american consumer has been well served by microsoft- better than the doj serves us in this case spend your time on terrorists and organized crime - do something useful
